Worldwide Day of Action against Violence 20 October 2008

2006 saw the launch of the United Nations (UN) Study on Violence against Children, which explored the horrific scale of violence that children are facing in the home, in the community, on the street, at school and in the workplace.

Progress has been made since then, but some countries have not acted upon the UN study recommendations.

Save the Children calls upon all governments to urgently commit to end all forms of violence against children and build national child protection systems that include the elimination of violence as a priority goal.

Let us continue to work together to make this world free from any form of violence against children!
